GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE FORGES AHEAD WITH BUILDING PROJECT

Real Estate Advisory Firm Selected to Assist In GPO's Relocation and Redevelopment Plan

Washington, D.C.--Public Printer of the United States Bruce James issued the following statement regarding the selection of a real estate advisory firm to provide consulting services for the relocation and redevelopment of the U.S. Government Printing Office:

"Today the Government Printing Office is one step closer to saving taxpayers an estimated $35 million a year. That is because we are making great progress towards realizing an innovative project that would redevelop the GPO's historic structures and in turn allow the agency to relocate from an aging multi-story building to a new, modern and efficient facility. It is with great pleasure that I announce the GPO has selected The Staubach Company to provide real estate consulting services related to all aspects of the GPO's relocation and redevelopment project. We are happy to have the support of the Joint Committee on Printing as we move forward on this project that will ultimately allow the GPO to better serve the current and future needs of our customers such as Congress, the White House, the Courts and most importantly, the American people."
